Whether this Priest-Head (whether High Priest, or Council,) stand in subordination to the King, as part of the fame formal Church, as a General, or a Vicerov, that maketh not a distinct Kingdom, (though he may make a difting subord nate Society as an Army, City, &c) or is he Head of a coordinate different species, so as that the same Kingdom shall be two Policies for naily, viz. a Christian Kingdom or Royal Church, and a Priestly Church; each being supream in their proper species, and both mide coordinate by Christ; and so they are formally two Churches Nicional. About the Jews the Controversie is made by Dissenters (e.g. Galaspie, Coleman, Selden, &c.) exceeding difficult. 3. Whether the very Jewith Church Policy be established by Christ for the Christian Church; or be repealed, 4 Whether the faid Ecclefiastical Head must be Oie as the High Priest, or an Aristocracy of many, or a Synod of the whole Clergy? or whether it be left indifferent which? 5. Or whether God hath ordained fuch a National Church-form, only by the general Command of doing all things in O-der and Unity and to Edification? 6. Which is the Prieftly-Head, or highest Governour of the Church of England, which is a constitutive part, as a King in a Kingdom? 7. Who is it that chooseth or authorizeth the National Priestly Head, that we may know when we have a lawful Chief Paftor, and

and when an Usurper? 8. Whether the King or he, is to be obeyed in Circumstances, or matters Ecclefiaftical, if they differ, and make contrary Laws? Without the solution of these questions, the name of a National Church will not be understood, nor of any practical importance. Our own

Because the Common-wealth is ceased for which it was made: 2. The Holy Ghost expresly and frequently determineth it so; even of that Law that was written in stone, as such, 2 Cor. 3.7,8,9, 0 11. Heb. 7.12.19. Gal. 4.21, &c. 3. 24. The natural part, and that which was inftituted positively long before for perpetuity, were both of them God's Laws before Moses's time, and as fuch, obliged other Nations, and fo do still: The matter written in stone (except some few mutable particulars, as the seventh day Sabbath, &c.) is fuch as we are still obliged to, 1. By Nature, 2 By Christ: But not as it was part of the fews peculiar Mosaical Law. Much less doth it bind all the world to its Policv.

§ 6. If the Jewish Law, either as such, or as ftablished by Christ for his Kingdom, did bind all the world to this day, then it would bind them to their Civil Policy, as much at least as to their Ecclefiastical. Governments could be lawful: 3. Then it would perplex men, to be fure, whether it be the old Mosaical form by Judges, or the later Regal form that bindeth: 4. Then such a Civil Council or Sanhedrim as was appointed the Jews, would be a Divine Establishment, and not variable at the will of Kings or People. Many other things would follow, which Kings would not easily believe.

§ 7. There may be much more said for the continuance of the Jews civil Policy than for their Ecclesiastical: For there is much more forbidden of the latter, than of the former; Though all nations be not bound to their civil policie, they may set it up if they please; They are not prohibited: For Christ hath not made new Laws for civil states as such; But he hath made new Church Laws, and thereby altered, yea prohibited much of the old.

§ 8. We know no more reason why the Jewish form should bind us, than that which was before the Jews: and particularily Melchezedeks, who was a King and Priest: God owned both and commandeth us neither, at least as in conformity to them.

§ 9. The Holy Ghost saith expressy Heb. 7.11.12. That persection was not by the Levitical Priesthood, and that the Priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change of the Law, which is called, the Law of a carnal Cammandment, verse 16, and that there is a disanuling of the Commandement going before for the weakness and unprositable ress of it; fur the Law made nothing persect, v. 18, 19, the Covenant or Law being not fault less a new one doth succeed it v. 7, 8.9, 10. ordinances of divine service and a worldly fan-Chuary : Heb. 9.1.8. 11. He taketh away the first Law and Priesthood, that he may establish the second, Heb. 10.8, 9. 11. 16. 17, &c.

§ 10. Whilest it is agreed on that the essentials of the work or office of the Jewish Priests is ceased, (as Heb. 7. and 8, 9, and 10, shew,) and their Title by birth, and the appropriation to one Tribe, &c. it followeth that the Jewish Priesthood is ceased. But yet we confess that Christ, if he had Pleased, might have settled a High Priest and Council like theirs in every nation for his own work. But if the old form bind us not, we are left only to enquire what new one is fetled by Christ, and Whether he have done fo or not.

If the Jews form of Government be ours, then the High-Priest must have the power of the Sword, or fit in judgment for life or death, as Deut. 17. 12, 13. and other places flew: But many Papists and Protestants are agreed that the clergy have no power of the Sword, or force, unless the King make them also Magistrates.

§ 14. It is a matter of so great importance to the Church to know whom we must obey, that it is not to be thought that any way is made necessary by Christ, which he hath not made intelligible and certain to be indeed his will: Especially when the Apostles strove who should be the chief, and two of them made it their request; and when the Corinthians and others were ready to set up one before another, and say I am which the Apostles were sent to endeavour, Mat-28.19. to convert Nations: But here is nothing, that we can perceive, to prove that these Christian Nations must have the Jewish Church Policy.

§ 18. Nay contrary, the Church is faid to be built on the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Eph.2.20. and not of the Mosaical Policy of Priesthood, Rev. 21.14. It hath twelve foundations.

§ 19. It is said, Zech. 2. 11. Many Nations shall be joyned to the Lord, and shall be my people. So Zech. 8. 22. Isa. 65. 1. Rom. 10. 20. Ifa. 2.2. & 55. 5. Hof 2.23. Ifa.60.3. & 49. 22. $ 20. We see not how the Synod Act. 15. maketh any thing for a National High Priest or Sanedrim, or any like Policy: For 1. It appeareth to be no act of proper National Government, but did bind other Churches as well as those within the Empire. 2. It was an arbitration at the request of doubting persons; and it was not the Relation of the Arbitrators to one feat of National Power (as the Metropolis) that was respected, but the quality of the persons sent to, who would have been equally obeyed had they dwelt in the least Village of another Land. 1. There were the Apostles that had the promise of of the Holy Ghost: 2. There were many whom the people must needs more conside in than in one; especially whose power was questioned by gainfayers. 3. Both Apostles, Elders and Brethren there were such as had seen, or were neer to Christ and his works, and therefore likeliest to know his mind. 4. They were Jews themselves, and therefore most impartial Judges in the point that Jewish Teachers troubled them about, so far as that they might well acquiesce when Jews themselves resolved them. And when the Apostles were dispersed, we find not any more ferusalem-Councils Governing the Imperial Churches.

§ 21. If that Councils Authority were properly National, and arose from the prerogative of ferusalem, then I. All the Apostles, when scattered, would have been subject to James, the first Bishop of ferusalem, (thought to be no Apostle:) 2. Then ferusalem might have after claimed the Supremacy as of Divine right, before Alexandria, Antioch or Rome. But it is certain by experience that the whole Church was of another mind, when ferufalem had not so much as the, fifth or lowest Patriarchate, till long after by another grant. But if the Power was not fixed to the place, but the Itinerant Apostles, then it is nothing to prove any Governing Church over others, as being affixed to such a place: Nor shall we easily find the Apostles Itinerant Successours in that power.

§ 22. II. It is certain that Christ chose twelve Apostles (besides Paul) who had a preeminence before other Ministers; and that he joyned with them some Prophets and Evangelists, appointing them all to gather Churches through the world, discipling discipling and baptizing Nations, and teaching them all things that he commanded (a work to be still done, and to which he promised his prefence to the end of the world:) And that thefe having gathered Converts, fet over them fixed Bishops (or Pastors or Elders) to be their con-Stant Guides, in Teaching, Publick Worship, and Discipline, under Christ the great Propher, Priest and King of the Church. And that to the Apostles first, and by them to others, he gave them the Keys (that is, the Judging Power of reception, and rejection, and the Official Power of pronouncing God's reception or rejection of them according to his Word.)

§ 23. There is not the least evidence that these Apostles did affix a Superiour Power over the other Churches to any particular feats, Patriarchal or Metropolitan, much less National; or that any of them exercised Government over the rest; or that they themselves did fix themselves as Bishops to any twelve or thirteen Cities in the world; much less to twelve King-

§24. There is no notice in Church history of any one National Church-power (Priest or Synod) setled, afferted or exercised under Heaven, of above three hundred years. Egypt and Affiria that were prophefied to be Christian Nations, never were distinct Christian Kingdoms, but parts of the Empire; nor had a National Church or Head (being but parts of fuch a Church :) Nay, when Rome got the National Primacy, it had not fuch a Prieftly Governing Soveraignty as the Jews High-Priest had.

$ 25. Though there was no Christian King for three three hundred years (unless he of Edessa, or Lncius of England, of whom we have little certainty; but it's like that both were subjects to others) yet if a Supream Church-Power had been necessary, the Apostles would have before erected it; which they never did: For even Rome pretendeth to be by them made the Ruler of the whole world, and not a meer National Head (which Constantinople claimed, but not as of Apostolical institution.)

$ 27. The question whether the Tews, had they believed, should have continued their High-Priest and Church-Policy, is vain as to our purpose; I. It being certain to Christ that they would be dissolved by unbelief: And 2, he having fetled another way, and changed theirs: 3. And if their Priesthood and Law (except as it typified spiritual things) had stood, yet it would not have bound the Gentile Christians in other, Nations.

§ 28. When Emperours became Christians, they did not fet up the Jewish Policy, nor thought themselves bound to it; no nor any setled Priestly Supremacy for National Government: For Councils were called but on rare accidents by the Emperours themselves, and to decide particular cases about Heresies: And the Pope had but the first voice in such Councils.

§ 29. But if every Nation must have the Jewish Policy, then the whole Empire must then have one High Priest, and then the Pope hath a fair pretence to his claim of a Divine Institution, as the Church Soveraign of the whole Empire, which, it's like, was then feven parts in eight of the whole Christian world at least, (unless Abas-

§ 30. III. But if the question be only whether a National Priestly Soveraignty be lawful? or whether God's general Rules (for Concord, Order, Edification) do bind the Churches prudentially to erect fuch a form? To this they favas followeth. I. We will first lay hold on certainties, and not prefer uncertainties before them. We are fure that fuch a power of Apostles and Pastors as is before mentioned, was established; and that the junior Pastors were as Sons to the seniors, ordained by them: Whether the power of Ordaining and Governing Ministers was by Apostolical Establishment appropriated to men of a superiour degree in the facred Ministry, seemeth to us very dark. 2. We are past doubt that all particular Churches, by Apostolical order, had Bishops, and that a Church was, as Hierom faith, Plebs Epifcopo adunata, and as Ignatius, the Unity of every Church was notified by this, that to every Church there was one Altar and one Bishop (at that time) and as Cyprian, Ubi Episcopus, ibi Ecclesia. 3. And we are fatisfied, that every Presbyter is Episcopus Gregis, whoever claim to be Episcopi Episcoporum (which the Carthage Council in Cyprian renounced.) 4. And we are farisfied that no Church-superiours have authority to destroy the particular Church-form, Ministry, Doctrine, Worship or Discipline, which were setled by the Holy Ghost in the Apostles; And that the priviledges and duties of these single particular Churches, being plainest and surest in Scripture, they must be continued whatever Canons or S 3 Com-

Commands of any superiour Priests should be against them. 5. Nor can they force any man to fin: 6. Nor have any Priests a forcing power, by the fword or violence, but only the power of the Word and Keys, that is, of taking in, or putting out of the Church, where they have power, and binding men over, on just cause, to the judgment of God. The power that they have is from Christ, and for him, and not against him; and for the Churches edification, and not destruction; and what is pretended contrary to this, is none. They cannot dispense with the Laws of God, but preach and execute them. 7. And these things being thus secured, though in our doubts we dare not swear or subscribe that National, Patriarchal, Provincial, or Metropolitical Powers are of God's institution; yet we resolve to live in all Christian peaceableness and submission, when such are over us.

31. And we must profess that when we find how anciently and commonly one Presbyter in each Church was peculiarly called the Bishop, without whom there was no (ordinary) ordinations, and against whom in matters of his power none was to refift, and also how generally the Churches in the Roman Empire conformed themselves to an imitation of the civil power (as to their limits) in all the official part (being all subject to the Emperour, who set up no Ecclefiastical Peer,) we are not so singular or void of reverence to those Churches, as not by fuch notices to be much the more inclined to the aforesaid submission and peaceableness under fuch a power; nor are we so bold or rash as to reproach it or condemn the Churches and excellent

§ 32. Nay we have already faid, that fecuring the state, worship, doctrine and true discipline of the inferiour particular (Parish) Churches, there are some of us that much incline to think that Archbishops, that is, Bishops that have some overlight of many Churches with their Pastors, are Lawful successours of the Apostles in the ordinary part of their work. And fuch of us have long ago faid, that the Episcopal Government of the Bohemian Waldenses described by Commenius and Lascitius, is most agreable to our judgment of any that we know excercifed: Therefore that which we humbly offered for our concord in England at His Majesties Restauration, was Archbishop Ushers form of the Primitive Church Government, not attempting any diminution of the Power, wealth or honour of the Diocesanes or Archbishops, but only a restauration of the Presbyters to their proper Officework, and some tolerable discipline to the particular Parish Churches.

§ 33. But we must ever much difference, so much of Church order and Government as God himself hath instituted, and is purely divine and unchangeable, from those accidentals which men ordain though according to Gods general Rules: For these are often various and mutable, and are means to the former, and never to be used against them. And of these accidentals of Government we fay as they that fay no fuch form is fixed by God. Concord, order & decency and edification are alwaies necessary, But oft times it may be indifferent whether concord, order and decency be expressed by this accidental way or that. And that which is most congruous for order, decency, edification and concord in one Countrey, Church or time, may be incongruous in another. Therefore if the question be but how far the giving one Bishop or Pastor power over others, or making disparity of Cities in conformity to the state, be prudently to be chosen; we only say, so that Gods establishment be not violated, whatever we might think best, we presume not herein to give Laws to the Lawgivers, nor to obtrude our Counsel uncalled, on our superiours, much less sedicionsly to oppose their Lawful institutions.

§ 34. But to those that think that Gods forefaid General Laws (of order, concord, edification) do make such a policy ordinarily necessary in the Churches, as imitateth the Jews, or the civil form of Government, we humbly offer to their confideration; 1. If fo, then it would have been the matter of an Vniverfal Law, (with its due exceptions;) And then Christ the only Vniversal Lawgiver would have made it: For if he have not made all necessary Universal Laws, his Laws are imperfect; And then there should be some other Vniversal Lawgiver to supply that defect: But there is no other upon earth (whether Pope or Council,) 2. It is contrary to the nature of undetermined circumstances to be alwaies the same, and so to be fit matter of such Vniversal or fixed Laws: The cases will vary, and then so will the duty; 3. There will be great diversity of the interest, and ingeny of the Judges of the case in several Countries and ages: And therefore though some think the said imitation of the civil nate alwaies best, yet others will not.

§ 35. But if such a settlement were certainly best, best, let it be remembred, 1. That the fews had nor under the chief High-Priest, one in every City or Tribe like Diocesane Bishops. 2. That their Synagogues had discipline within themselves; ever where there was but a Village of ten perfons, there was a Presbyter that had the power § 36. What man doth prudently set up, man may prudently alter as there is cause. Greg. Nazianzen earnestly wisheth that there were no difference of Place or feats among the Pastors of the Church And therefore he neither thought their Government of each other to be of Divine right, nor of prudential necessity or use: Else he would have been against it. And the whole Greek Church did, and still doth take the feats of preeminence to be but of mans appointment, or else they would never have changed them, and fet Constantinople so high as they did: And the Council of Calcedon expresly determineth, that Rome was by the fathers made the chief feat because it was the seat of the Emperour; which was mutable.

§ 37. The Councils in those daies were about Popes or Patriarchs, and could depose them: And yet it is most evident to any man confiderately reading such history, that all the Councils, called before Christian Emperours gave them more power and conjoyned their authority, did meet only for acts of Agreement and not of Regiment over each other: Many fuch fynods are mentioned by Eusebius: And the Right Reverend Arch-bishop Usher declared his judgment so in general that Councils had but an agreeing power, and not a Regent power over the particular Bishops.

Yet

Yet these two things must be supposed, I. That the Pastors in a synod are still Rectors of their flocks, and their Canons to them may be more authoritative than a fingle Pastors words: 2. That Gods Law bindeth us to keep love and concord, and the Agreements of Councils may determine of the matter in alterable points; and so even absent and present Bishops may, concordia gratia, be obliged by Gods Law to keep such canons as are made for concord, and fo they may be the matter of our duty. But seeing the Church for 300 years, judged Councils to have no proper Governing power over particular Pastors; and Bishops, or Patriarchs fingly had ever less power than Councils, it followeth that then a Churches Government of disparity and supraordinate Bishops like the civil, or like the fews, was not then taken to be of divine right, nor then of any right at all.

§ 38. And as to the doubt [whether it began after 300 years to be a prudential duty or at least most desirable when we hear what is said on both fides we think it not easie to judge, either how much in such a case Christ hath left to humane prudence, nor which way the scales of prudence herein will ordinarily turn. On one fide it is faid 1. That it is abfurd that there should be no appeals for injured persons to a superiour power; 2. And that the dissensions of the Church else will be remediless, and all will be broken into herefies and fects; 3. And that Apostolical men of a higher rank than meer Presbyters will else have no convenient opportunity to excercise their Governing power, if it be not tyed to fixed feats.

§ 39. On the other fide they plead; 1. That it is fafer for the Church to have Religion in the power of many Bishops or Pastors, than that one High Priest or Patriarch should have power to corrupt it, or filence the faithful preachers, or persecute the people when ever he proveth a bad man: Yea they fay it must be rare if he be not bad, feeing it is certain that the most proud and worldly men (which are the worst) will be the most earnest seekers of rich and honourable places; and he that feeketh will usually find. 2. They fay Christ directly forbad this to his Apostles Luk.22. That which they strove for was it that he forbad them: But that which they strove for was who should be the chief or greatest (and not who should tyrannize) 3. They say that all Church history affureth us that there have been more Schisims and scandalous contentions about the great superiour Bishopricks far, than any of the rest: It is a doleful thing to read the history of the Churches of Alexandria, Antioch, Constantinople, and Rome : Gregory Nazianzen giveth it as the reason, why the contention at Cesarea was so lamentable, because it was so high an Archbishoprick. The whole Christian world hath been scandalized, torn and distracted by the strife of Bishops of and for the highest seats. Their famous General Councils which we justly honour for their function and that which they did well, were shamefully militant: even the first and most honoured Council at Nice, was with great difficulty kept in Peace by the personal presence, wisdom and authority of Constantine, preaching peace to the preachers of peace, burning their libels of mutual accusation, Nazianzens descriptions of the ignorance and insolence, and naughtiness of the Clergy, Orat 1. and of the shameful state of the Bishops, Orat. 32. must make the readers heart to grieve, The people he describeth as contentious at Constantinople yet as endued with the Love of God, though their zeal wanted knowledge, pag, 528. But (the Courtiers, as whether true to the Emperours he knew not, but for the greatest part perfidious to God: And the Bishops as sitting on adverse thrones, and feeding adverse opposite flocks, drawn by them into factions, like the clests that Earthquakes make, and the pestilent diseases that infect all about, and distracting and dividing all the world, separating the East from the West, by the noise, of mens et tuns, antiquus et novus; nobilior aut ignobilior; multitudine opulentior aut, tennior; raging like furious horses in battel, and like madmen casting duit into the air, and under their heads fulfilling their own contentions and becoming the determiners of wicked ambition and magnificence, and unrighteousness and absurd Judges of matters: The same men (faith he) are to day of the Same throne (or fide) and judgement, as we are, if so our leaders and chief men carry them: To morrow if the wind do but turn, they are for the contrary seat, and judgement. happy daies of good Theodofius? But all this is yet little to what the same man saith of Bishops in his last Oration de Episcopis, Vol. 2. too sharp and large to recite. Perhaps it will be faid, that it was the Macedonian or Arrian Bishops that he meant: So one Papist was not ashamed to anfwer me, when the whole scope of his writing speaketh the contrary, that he spake of the Council at Constantinople, and other such, and expresly faith in his Epist. 59. to Sophronius, pag. 816. si eos inveneritis non ob fidei doctrinam, sed ob privatas simultates inter se distractos & divulsos, quod quidem ipse observavi. But some will say that he was wrongfully cast out by that Council of Constantinople, and he speaketh but of that, or that injury made him satyrical by exasperation. But 1. The places cited shew that he speaketh not of that Council only: And Epist. 55. Procopio pag. 814. he faith (refusing to come to a Council) ego si vera scribere oportet hoc animo sum, ut Omnem Episcoporum Conventum sugiam: quoniam nullius concilii finem lætum & faustum vidi,nec quod depulsionem malorum potius quam accessionem & incrementum habuerit:pertinaces enim contentiones & dominandi cupiditates (ne me quaso gravem & molestum existimes hec scribentem) ne ullis quidem verbis explicari queant, citiusque aliquis improbitatem arcessetur, dum aliis judicem se prabet, quam ut aliorum improbitatem comprimat. And that injury made Gregory injurious is an injurious conjecture, seeing all his endeavours in these businesses were for piety and peace: And it was partly for his speaking for the Peace of the Church of Antioch, (which had long had two Bishops, Paulinus and Meletius, and Flavianus, who had taken an oath not not to be their Bishop while either of them lived, intruded by Perjuries and the Bishops wills)that this Council turned against Gregory; (and because they chose him nor.) And for peace he quit his place; and many and earnest Epistles he wrote after to the Civil Magistrates, to keep the Bishops in peace at the next Councils, lest Religion should be quite shamed and weakened by them. And was not the contention at the two Councils of Ephesus more stigmatized by Historians than this that Gregory fo lamenteth? when they seemed rather to fight, than peaceably to feek for Truth; in the latter of which Flavianus received his deaths hurt, and the history of the better of them between Cyril, and Nestorius, and Johan.

The very controversie with its consequence was lamentable when one Council of Bishops at Constantinople had cast out excellent Gregory; another neer cast out excellent Chrysoftom, his free speech and strict life being not endured, and chose an old useless man Arsacius; Atticus, and Sissins that succeeded him being dead, the people did so dislike all the clergy of Constantinople, that they would have one like Chryfostom of a Monastery by Antioch ; Nestorius a man of study, retirement, a poor garb, a strict life, abhorring publick contentions, and loving quietness, but of a pievish zeal against dissenters called hereticks, as enemies to the Churches unity and peace; fo that he presently persecuted many of them even the Novatians themselves, and stirred up the Emperour to root them all out, and by Gods just judgement received such measure as he had measured. A quarrel arose whether Saint Mary

Mary should be called The Mother or Parent of MAN, or that Parent of GOD: Nestorius, to the end the controversie, was against both, and would have her called, The Parent of Christ who was God and man (but not of God:) Some Startled ar this; And Cyril of Alexandria (a man of great parts, spirit and power, the head of a turbulent people, the first Bishop, saith Socrates, that assumed the Sword) wrote Letters of reproof to him; and Celestine, Bishop of Rome seconded him: yea Cyril followeth it with writing upon writing, to prove that S. Mary must be called the Parent of God; with fo great a number of words, and so many Anathematisms, as made the noise and flame great, but ambiguity made it feem dangerous to many; so that it grew to a great and open controversie, whether Nestoriusor Cyril was a damnable Heretick; some so calling one, and some the other; so that the Emperour Theod. 2. was fain to call a General Council at Ephesus, to prevent the utter consusion of the Churches: There Nestorius came first, and once only appeared; and being charged with the Herefie of denying Mary to be the Parent of God, he told them, that he would not say that God was two or three months old, and so departed. To Cyrils large writings, he returned a short Letter, professing, that he was for the distinction of Natures only in the Unity of Person; but at large proveth that Christs Godhead had no beginning, that it could not suffer, or die, nor rise again; and therefore that those things which were said of the Manhood, must not be said of the Godhead, that it was begotten, died, &c. unless they would be Hereticks or Pagans. brought into the Council against them by Charyfins and their Anathemata's after; and I think you will see, that the errour of Nestorius lay in his want of skill in speaking, and that one fide spoke of a phrase de abstracto, and the other of the Concrete and if fo, both meant the fame thing; though Cyril was judged to use the most skilful words: Ciril denyed not but that the Deity was not begotten or Crucified, but said that God was begotten and Crucified, and was passible; Nestorius denyed not that he who was God in one person with the manhood, was begotten, Crucified and passible, but not the Deity. But Cyril said that the phrase [God was born, Cracified, &c.] was good; yea necessary, and not (without anathematized herefie) to be denyed, because in one person the titles and actions are communicable : Nestorius said, that it was wicked to communicate the infirmities of humanity to the Deity, as to fay, God did grow bigger, and was afraid, and was hungry; and needed belp from Angels, and died.) For he thought this phrase applied it to the Deity: (Let any man that's impartial, judge whether this Controversie were not about words rather than matter.) Theodorer was a greater Scholar than Nestorius, and he became the Champion of his Caufe, supposing that Locutio formalis est maxime propria; and therefore that he that faith, God had a beginning, increase, death, passions, must be supposed to mean it, qua Deus, as he is God: And fo two Saints, St. Cyril and St. Theodoret, fell at large to prove each other damnable Hereticks. John, Patriarch of Antioch, being far off, was long in coming to the Synod. Memnon, Bishop of Ephesus, joyning with Cyril, before he Bishops came, beg n and condemned, and deposed deposed Nestorius as a Heretick. Nestorius let them all alone, and medled little himself, alledging that Candidianus Comes forbad him to appear. But when John of Ant. came, he took Nestorius's part, and gathered a Council with himself, and Gandidianus the Emperours Officer took his part. John's Council condemned and deposed Cyril and Memnon, as they had done Nestorms: And thus two Councils at Ephelas fate damning one another. The Emperour knew not what to do with them, but requireth each parry to fend some of their Bishops to him: when they came, he permitted them not long to come neerer than Calredon, for fear of tumults: while they were there, the people of Constantinople flocked to them, and most of the people being for Nestorius, and most of the Courtiers, Clergy and Monks against him, they fell into diffention to the stoning of some about their Meetings, for Preaching to the People. Theodoret and his Affociates profecuted it against Cyril, as those that declared their resolution to die rather than yield to his Herefies (as they called them) and accused him as if he had been the most proud, unquiet troubler of the world. The other fide answerably accused them of dangerous blasphemy and heresie. At last the Emperour thought it the best way for peace, to send Johan. Comes Largitionum with power and commission to depose the Leaders that each Party had deposed, viz. Nestorius, and Cyril and Memnon: But John wrote an Epistle to the Emperour, how furious they were against each other, and how Cyril's Party would not hear the Emperour's Letters, because Nestorius was there, and how they raged and fell to fighting (a dole-ful ftory.) But at last the Emperour sceing that Cyril had the stronger (and the orthodox) side, and the Court and Clergy being against Nestorius, and yet being loth to divide Joh. Antioch. and the Oriental Bishops from the rest, thought it the most healing way to depose Nestorius alone, and restore Cyril and Memnon and to charge (magna cum feveritate jubet, faith Bin, Notes) 70h, Ant to be reconciled with Cyril, and to unite; fo that Joh. and Theodoret, and the Oriental Bishops moved with fear and desiring peace, fent their Confession to Cyril, and Cyril said, it was the same that he meant; and so they were fuddenly made all Orthodox, that had not underflood it but by the Rod : But Neftorius returned to his Monastery by Antioch (Chrysoftom's place) and there liv'd four years in great peace and reputation; but then he was no longer to be there endured, but banished into forein Countries, driven about in sufferings, in which he died. And Theodoret, it feems, was not well reconciled, when, hearing of the death of Cyril, he wrote to Joh. Antioch. that now there was hope the Churches might have peace, the great enemy of all peace being gone to the place where such men cease to trouble, &c. But so great was the rupture thus made, that to this day it is not healed, great part of the East adhering then to Nestorius, and those Country-Christians being called Nestorian Hereticks and out of the Church by the Papifts to difgrace them, because they will not own their Pope. Nestorius being thus condemned, Eutyches thought he would be far enough from his Herefie, and faid, that the Union of Christ's two Natures made them to be but one: This Herefie one T 2 Council

Council at Constant under Flavian, condemned. Another after by the countenance of the Emper rour acquit him : The Emperour Theod. 2. commandeth a General Council again at Ephefus, and maketh Diescorus President; who being Cyril's Successor, though he had held to his Doctrine against Nestorius, for the Unitive Predication; and though he professed that the Synod medled not de fide, but about matter of Justice between Flavian and Eutyches, yet countenanced by the Emperour, he domineered, and by threatning got all the General Council fave the Popes Legates to subscribe against Flavian, and he was beaten, and died of the hurr, faith Bin. Notes, In boc tam borrendo Episcoporum suffragio sola Navicula Petri incolumis emergens, salvatur. The whole Council went against the Pope, and the right: But sure Christ's United Natures are in several senses both two and one; but two in the primary and most proper sense. The ni moon may

Thus you fee what unhappiness even this National Government of Bishops in those good times was lyable to. It was by Bishops striving who should be chief that the Donatists set up against the Catholicks, and the very Novatians were not free; much less the appolinarians, and most others that caused the Schisims of those times, in which the Bishops were almost ever the chief cause. Even such worthy men as Theophilus, Alex, and Epiphanius could not endure Chrysoftom; such men ejected him once and again, as Theodoret faith he purposely forbeareth to name for reverence of their virtues. tation, and that even worthy men in such temptations are frail, when a new Emperour Martian was on the other fide, (the right;) when Diofcorus had professed that he was neither for transmutation, division, nor confusion of Christs natures (and therefore was for distinction;) when the Egyptian Bishops professed their consent with the Synod, only craving that they might not be put to Anathematize Dioscorus till they had another Patriarch, but so long to delay; when they professed that if they did, they were fure to be killed when they came home, and falling on the Earth cryed to their brethren miseremini miseremini spare us or kill us here; yet they cry out hereticks, hereticks, away with them, till the civil Judges rescued them: and how many of these had but lately subscribed against Flavianus at Ephosus, (& here were in one point for Leo, and in another against him?) Leo's Epistle which was for their cause against Diofcorus they cryed up; and condemned Dioscorus for excommunicating the Pope; but the Canon for exalting Constantinople, they maintained against Leo's will, and contemptuously cryed out Qui aliter sentiunt Romam ambulent; he that readeth the clamours at this Council, and how the same Bishops that had lately subscribed the condemnation of Flavianus with Dioscorus were zealous here on the other fide, and cryed out omnes peccavimus, excusing it by their fear of threatnings and Souldiers, when a poor Christian woman could have suffered Martyrdom rather than fin; And he that readeth how after all this they were fo ready to Anathematize others, and to contemn the prostrate Egyptian Bishops, will think that he seeth the first Council of Constantinople as described by Nazianzen here exemplified, notwithstanding the honour that is due to them for their orthodoxness. You see in this much how the great Bishops at the first five General Councils (Nic. I. Const. I. Eph. 1. & 2. And Calced.) did carry But when they were asunder were they setled, & did they keep the Churches in concord by these Councils? Let us but, for one instance, consider what followed this excellent Council of Calcedon; 1. Leo the Bishop of Rome approved it against Dioscorus, but abhorred the 28th Canon, which fet up Constantinople with equal priviledges, and that above Alexandria and Amioch: So that the Pope rested not in this Council. 2. What sedition there was at Alexandria upon the change made by this Council all the daies of Martian, and of the murder of Proterins presently after, Liberatus in Breviario, and many other tell at large, 3. In Palestine the Monks that had been at the Council, returned lamenting that the faith was there betrayed, and stird up their fraternity to rescind the acls: They expelled Juvenal Bishop of fe usalem; The Empress Endocia took their part: They killed Severianus Bishop of Scythopolis: They compelled men to communicate with them: They murdered Athanasius a Deacon at Jerusalem for contradicting them, and gave his flesh to dogs; They compelled Dorothew the Emperours Lieutenant to joyn with them, till after 20 months. Javenal was restored Niceph. l. 15. c. 9. And in many Countries this contention followed; and the women Endocia and Pulcheria had no small hand in all, till Pulcheria procured Endocias Conversion to approve the Council. 3. Where

3. When Leo came to reign, the sedition revived at Alexandria between the murderers of Praterius: Timothy Elurus made Bishop by the Councils enemies, deposed by Leo, and Timothy, Salophaciolus put in his place, and all was in confusion. The Egyptian Bishops write to the Emperour against the Eutychians; The Emperour sends forth his circular letters for the Council; Niceph. l. 15. c. 17. 18. 19. 4. At Antioch, Petrus, Caphens ambitious of the Bishoprick, got into Martyrius place by Leo's help, and anathematized all that would not say that God was Crucified and Suffered, and tore that Church in pieces: Martirius, when he could do no good, forfook them, with these words [Clero rebelli et populo inobedienti & ecclesia contaminata nuncium remitto :] Cnapheus reviled the Council : Leo for this banished him: Stephanus, a friend of the Council, succeeded him; him boyes killed with sharp quils and cast him into the river for favouring the Council: And Calendion succeeding him, made them Anathematize the aforesaid Cnaphous, Leo being dead, dissolute Zeno reigned, Easiliscus taking advantage of his lewd life, usurped the Empire, and made use of the Schisms to promote his ends: And first publisheth his circular against the Council of Calcedon; to this faith Niceph. 1. 16. c.4. besides the three Patriarchs no less than five hundred Bishops subscribed, and renounced the Council. But Acacius of Constantin, and Dav. Columella perswaded Basiliscus quickly to write clean contrary Letters for the Council, feeing that this was like to prove the stronger side. And when Zeno was restored, who was for the Council, the Afian Bishops turned again, and wrote
